I did feel that we lost our focus and energy that we had from Friday's night session going into Saturday morning's session, but we refocused and had a very strong last session Saturday. Having Emma Skelley break the pool record in the 1,650 freestyle was great, and we had a lot of significant time improvements from last weekend in every event, which was a goal for both the men's and women's teams this weekend. I thought our relays were good, but we still have areas we can improve on for next week. We have a big challenge next weekend on the road and this weekend certainly was a good step forward for us."
